One of the benefits of using JPA and Hibernate is that they make it very easy to manage associations and to use them in queries. But as you've seen in this post, there are a few pitfalls you should avoid. So, when you model your next many-to-one or one-to-many association, please make sure to: Not use unidirectional one-to-many associations

As we have seen in section 2, we can specify a many-to-one relationship by using the @ManyToOne annotation. A many-to-one mapping means that many instances of this entity are mapped to one instance of another entity – many items in one cart. The @ManyToOne annotation lets us create bidirectional relationships too.

I need to create one to many distance queries. I understand that the gross distance limit is 12,000. Since I cannot know the gross distance until after the locations are calculated what is the best way to accomplish this? I know I can do one location per query but that seems very inefficient. What is the best way to submit queries without exceedng the limit?
