Certain critical accounting rules are being subtly shaped to reflect the interests of small groups of informed corporate experts, according to a new book by Harvard Business School accounting and corporate accountability expert Karthik Ramanna. Those shifting the rules often see their actions as being within the legitimate purview of corporate profit seeking.

As a “pre-MBA” course, Harvard’s HBX CORE (Credential of Readiness) covered the basics of statistics, economics, and accounting using the case study method. With so many free online courses covering the same topics from schools like Wharton and Stanford, the $US1,500 price can seem unnecessarily steep.
