Then, pass these batches sequentially to the function `elmo_vectors()`. I will keep these batches in a list: `list_train = [train [i:i+100] for i in range (0,train.shape [0],100)]` `list_test = [test [i:i+100] for i in range (0,test.shape [0],100)]` Now, we will iterate through these batches and extract the ELMO vectors.

Developed in 2018 by AllenNLP, ELMO it goes beyond traditional embedding techniques. It uses a deep, bi-directional LSTM model to create word representations. Rather than a dictionary of words and their corresponding vectors, ELMO analyses words within the context that they are used.

Using ELMO interactively# You can use ELMO interactively (or programatically) with iPython. The `allennlp.commands.elmo.ElmoEmbedder` class provides the easiest way to process one or many sentences with ELMO, but it returns numpy arrays so it is meant for use as a standalone command and not within a larger model. For example, if you would like to learn a weighted average of the ELMO vectors then you need to use `allennlp.modules.elmo.Elmo` instead.

Elmo does have word embeddings, which are built up from character convolutions. However, when Elmo is used in downstream tasks, a contextual representation of each word is used which relies on the other words in the sentence. Elmo does not produce sentence embeddings, rather it produces embeddings per word "conditioned" on the context.
