Change-ringing is the music that is rung on bells hung for "full circle ringing" as described above. A set of bells, (called a "ring" of bells) is normally tuned to form the notes of a major scale, and commonly comprises 5, 6, 8, 10 or 12 bells. For the purpose of this explanation, examples are given for 6 bells.

A handbell is rung by grasping it by the handle and moving the wrist, causing the clapper inside (which is on a hinge) to strike the outside of the bell, producing the sound. The type of bell used by a town crier has a clapper that can move in all directions (the hinge being a ball), but the bells used in handbell ringing have clappers that only move in one plane (side to side), allowing the player greater control as the bell can only sound when it is moved in one of two directions.

An introduction to bellringing. Church bells are pretty substantial chunks of metal. St James s Cardington has eight bells - the treble (no 1), the lightest bell with the highest note, weighs 224 kg (well over 4 cwt) and the tenor (no 8), the heaviest with the lowest note, weighs 358 kg (over 7 cwt). This is actually quite light compared with some churches - the tenor at Hereford Cathedral weighs in at about 1 tons and there are several around at over 2 tons.

When an electric current is applied, it produces a repetitive buzzing, clanging or ringing sound. Electric bells have been widely used at railroad crossings, in telephones, fire and burglar alarms, as school bells, doorbells, and alarms in industrial plants, since the late 1800s, but they are now being widely replaced with electronic sounders.
